

Regional Crisis Response Information

Local mental health services and information for WA grain growing communities to help you, or someone within your community, manage the response to a crisis.

Together we are aiming to empower growers and regional communities to look after their mental health.

As part of the Regional Mental Wellness Program, four of the most trusted providers of mental health services have joined forces to provide the best mental health care for the Western Australian grain-growing regions, facilitated and supported by CBH.

This resource has been developed by Lifeline WA in conjunction with CBH and supported by Youth Focus, MIFWA and Black Dog Institute.

I'm having a difficult time

There is a tendency not to talk about problems until things are desperate, however it does not need to be this way. Feelings can look and feel different for everyone, but it is important to know that experiencing difficult times in your life is normal and common.

Whatever the case is, please know that there is always support available. If you, or someone you know, is having a difficult time, it might be a sign to speak to a GP or seek further help. You can find a local GP via healthdirect.gov.au.

Here are some signs to look out for:

- Withdrawing from others and usual activities
- Feeling overwhelmed and finding it hard to cope with everyday tasks
- Using alcohol or drugs to cope
- Feeling tearful, wanting to cry all the time
- Feeling irritable, restless, or agitated
- Lacking energy or feeling tired all the time
- Feeling angry or short tempered
- Experiencing 'brain fog', finding it hard to think clearly, loss of concentration
- Changes to your sleeping or eating patterns
- Feeling like no one seems to understand you
- Feeling lonely
- Having suicidal thoughts

Stress, Anxiety and Depression

Farming can be a stressful occupation, especially during times of harvest, extreme climate events or economic pressure. During these times it is more important than ever to take care of yourself and focus on eating regularly and getting enough sleep.

Depression, the persistent lowering of your mood, which can last for weeks, months or even years, and sometimes without any apparent reason, can often exist alongside stress and anxiety. Depression can interfere with a person's daily life, making it hard to cope. Understanding and recognising symptoms in ourselves or others is an important step in managing depression. There are many effective ways to treat depression and many individuals go on to lead meaningful and productive lives.

By seeking support, it is possible to manage stress levels, get help for depression, and feel more equipped to cope.

If you are struggling with stress, anxiety or depression, a GP can assist you in creating a mental health care plan, or refer you to local supports.

Domestic and Family Violence

Rates of domestic and family violence are higher in regional, rural and remote areas. Geographical and social structures in these communities, as well as unique social values and norms, result in specific experiences of domestic and family violence.

Domestic and family violence occurs when someone who has a close personal relationship with you makes you feel afraid, powerless or unsafe. It can be physical, but it can also be emotional and psychological. Non-physical forms of abuse can be just as damaging as physical assaults. If you feel disrespected, unable to be yourself, afraid to disagree, or negotiate for what you want, this may be a sign of abuse.

Photo credit:
Alex Emin, York

Forms of abuse and violence can include:

- Physical harm - threats of self/physical harm, smashing things, hurting pets
- Emotional and psychological abuse - humiliation, put-downs and blaming
- Financial abuse - strict or unfair control of money
- Verbal abuse - name-calling, yelling
- Social abuse - controlling where you go and who you see
- Sexual abuse - and rape
- Stalking - following, making excessive phone calls, texts or emails
- Spiritual or cultural abuse - controlling practices or choice

Bereaved by Suicide

Grief is experienced and expressed in different ways. When someone tragically takes their own life, those left behind, the bereaved, often experience a very complicated form of grief. Many of these reactions can relate to the person no longer physically being in your life, and some may relate to the fact that the death was by suicide. If you have experienced the suicide of a friend or loved one, it is important to find support.

If you, or someone you know, needs support, speak to a GP or seek further help.

Visit heathdirect.gov.au to find a local GP, or reach out to one of the following support services.

Photo credit:
Chris Antonio, Northam

Some suggestions for support include:

- Ask for help - talk to a counsellor/psychologist, a helpline like Lifeline (13 11 14), friends and family, online support groups, or a GP to find comfort, support, and ways to cope.
- Take time out – it is okay to give yourself time out from the pain you are experiencing.
- Stay connected and accept support from friends, family, and support networks.
- Honour the deceased person – talk about them, share memories/photos, or practice any spiritual or cultural activities that are meaningful to you.
- Stay healthy – eat well, hydrate, exercise and get quality sleep.
- Consider joining a suicide bereavement group – sharing your experience with others who have been through similar loss might be helpful for you to connect and feel you are not alone.

Supporting Someone After a Loss

The immediate aftermath of someone taking their own life can be confusing, painful, and extremely challenging. The ones left behind can feel overwhelmed with feelings of deep sadness, disbelief, and numbness, and can even feel angry at the person for not reaching out for help. It is important to remember that there is no “right way” to grieve, and the best thing you can do to support someone after a loss is to listen without judgement and be there to support them however they may need. Practical support can include offering to notify people of the death, helping with daily tasks (ie. meals and washing), organising the funeral, and not being afraid to invite the bereaved person to talk about the person who has died.

Please note, there are a number of Suicide Prevention Coordinators across Western Australia. You can reach out to find your local contact through: thinkmentalhealthwa.com.au/think-mental-health/suicide-prevention-coordinators-and-regions/

Financial Stress

Financial stress can occur in many situations and under various circumstances. Some situations that might cause financial stress include losing a job or being retrenched, long-term unemployment, being unable to get full-time work, inability to pay bills or not being able to deal with the increasing costs of living. Worrying about money is not uncommon, however, if it is affecting your physical or emotional health and relationships, it is important to seek help.

Alcohol and Drug Support

Substance misuse is the harmful use of substances (like drugs and alcohol) for non-medical purposes. Often associated with the use of illicit drugs, legal substances can also be misused, such as alcohol, prescription or over-the-counter medication, caffeine, nicotine and volatile substances (e.g. petrol, glue, paint).

Addiction is a physical and/or psychological need for a substance, due to regular, continued use. Some substances are highly addictive, others are less addictive. However, the symptoms of addiction are similar no matter which substance is used.

If you, or someone you know needs support, speak to a GP or seek further help.

Children, Youth, and Young Adults

Challenges, difficulties, and mental health concerns do not discriminate based on age. These issues affect us all. For younger people there can often be barriers to seeking support including feelings of isolation, not feeling understood or the gravity of their concerns being dismissed, not knowing where or how to seek support, and not knowing who to speak to. Having a safe space to express worries, feelings and concerns can be beneficial to work through difficulties, increase connectedness and confidence and feel heard. Opening up can also reduce anxiety, build confidence, and foster strong communities for both youth and young adults.

If you, or a young person you know, needs support, speak to a GP or seek further help.

LGBTIQ+ Support

In Australia, and other parts of the world, the acronym LGBTIQ+ attempts to capture diversity and stands for lesbian, gay, bisexuality, trans, gender diverse, non-binary, intersex, and queer peoples. The '+' stands for all other sexualities, sexes, and genders that are not captured within these letters. LGBTIQ+ people may experience discrimination, harassment, and hostility in many parts of their everyday life – in their places of work and education, when accessing health or other services. Issues impacting people who identify as LGBTIQ+ can be complex and varying, unique to everyone. As such, the experience, response, and impact for each individual will differ from person to person.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Support

For Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples, good health is often about physical, emotional, social, cultural, and spiritual wellbeing, for both the individual and the community. Tragically the rates of depression and suicide among Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples are high and there are some unique factors that have an impact on the social and emotional wellbeing of this community.

If you, or someone you know needs support, speak to a GP, or seek further help.

Living with a Disability

Around 4.3 million people in Australia are living with a disability. People with disabilities, just like everyone else, have aspirations, abilities, and contributions to make to their local communities. They experience the usual ups and downs of life and, for some people, living with a disability may impact their mental health and wellbeing.

Carers are people who provide care and support to family members and friends who have a disability, mental illness, or a chronic condition. There are over 2.7 million people who are caring for others in Australia. As a result of this help and support, carers can also experience impacts to their own wellbeing.

If you are someone living with a disability, or a carer of someone with a disability, it is important to know that there is support available to you, to help you navigate the challenges unique to your experiences.
